Job interviews can include one or more "What if . . . "questions! When your interviewers turn to you and ask:

"Here is a hypothetical situation.
How would you approach it?"

You'll be able to lay out the logic needed to fully understand any situation and make a rational recommendation. In short, you will be able to demonstrate you can think "practically", knowing how to logically approach any situation, using an effective discovery and decision process.

It's time to be proactive about winning the job you want. Employers are making it clear they want people who are good thinkers. Prepare yourself for the transition from academia to working in the wider world.

What do employers want?
